To our Library Community:

As the dust of winter gets brushed off our collective shoulders we're eager to try experimenting with some of the new ideas that came out of our recent workshops with a library planning consultant. Just like in our own homes, we sometimes become blind to how the usability of a space could be improved. As we move things around and try out new formats we hope you can bear with us through the changes. We also hope to hear from you about what you like, what you don't like and what thoughts you have on our spaces in general. Our library should reflect our community and to do that we need your input!

Change is nothing new for public libraries. We've been rolling with the punches for decades as we attempt to anticipate the needs of future library users. If we stay optimistic, flexible, and open minded I'm certain new successes are right around the corner.

Until next time,
