To our Library Community:

The only constant is change - Heraclitus

These wise words remind us that the process of continuous improvement is never static. As the winter months come to a close Hershey Public Library is preparing to bloom once again. Through a series of surveys and workshops being held this spring we're looking to engage the community in shaping the library of the future. The Hershey community has been an incredible steward of library services since the first inception in 1913 when the Hershey Free Library was registered with the state. Since then our world has changed and the library has changed with it. We hope to engage the public in this process so that library services continue to reflect the interests of our users and the needs of our community.

We live in a time of monumental innovation and rapid social change. Through this tumult our libraries have an opportunity to define themselves once again as a welcome retreat for the weary and a place of discoveries for the curious. We hope you join us in shaping the library of today and tomorrow.

Until next time,

Laura O'Grady
